In the first code, the segmentation fault occurs due to it consuming too much memory trying to allocate the array onto a stack while there isn't enough memory in the stack for that array the second code runs normally because it allocates the array onto the heap instead of the stack using malloc(), which returns the pointer to the memory large enough to hold the amount of data wanted provided